He said that he (can see) could see.

It is alarming that the teen stress experience is so similar to that of adults," said Norman B. Anderson, the American Psychological Association's chief executive. "In order to break this cycle of stress and unhealthy behaviors as a nation, we need to provide teens with better support and health education, at school and at home, at the community level and in their interactions with health care professionals."

This fact doesn't surprise the experts who work with teens. They say that the main causes are: pressures of schoolwork, social life, sports or other activities — combined with a relentless media culture — because of that young people become tenser than ever before.

The American Psychological Association's survey found that 16 % of teens reported feeling sad or depressed because of stress and 30% felt overwhelmed. Another 33 % said that stress makes them tired and 21% said they've skipped meals because of it.

Stress seems to be getting worse for some teens, according to the survey. About 21% of kids said that their stress level had increased in the past year, twice as many as those who said that it went down. And 37 % said that they expected their stress level would rise in the coming year.

A new national survey from the Pew Internet & American Life Project illustrates how electronic games have become in youth culture. The survey, released Tuesday, combined the telephone responses from a sample of 1,102 young people, aged between 12-17, and their parents.

When the young people were asked whether they played video games, 97% of them said that they did (that is 99% of boys and 94% of girls). In fact, 7% of those surveyed said that they didn't have a computer at home, but they had a game console, such as Sony's PlayStation, Microsoft's Xbox or Nintendo's Wii. When they were questioned about the games they liked to play, 80% of the respondents replied that they played five or more different game genres like racing, puzzles, sports and action games. The favourite games were Guitar Hero, Halo 3, Madden NFL, solitaire and Dance Dance Revolution.

Interestingly, about a third (1/3) of the parents who were surveyed said that they played video games with their children some or all of the time. Most of those parents were younger than 40, part of a generation that had grown up playing video games themselves.

As expected, the survey found that, while young Americans did not necessarily play the same thing, nearly all of them — girls included — played video games of one kind or another.
