People, long time ago, used to live in groups in caves or in jungles. They wandered from place to place hunting animals and looking for food like nuts, roots, wild fruits and berries.

Then later, people began to settle along or near rivers. They used the river water for drinking, cooking and washing. Rivers also made good farmland for these early river settlers. The people started to cultivate their own crops. This means they could settle down in one place and they did not have to wander in search of food any more.

Besides the fertile soil, rivers were also used as a form of highway. Men began to use rafts and boats as a form of water transport to carry their extra food. They sailed to another part of the river to trade with the other settlers.

Therefore, they became farmers as well as traders. When they began to travel up and down the rivers, they learned about the customs and beliefs of the other settlers.

- As trade and transportation grew, the population also grew. These river settlements grew into cities, and these cities became centers of great civilizations like those found in early Egypt, India and China. These civilizations had powerful governments with many laws and government workers. Then these cities grew into some of the important and powerful countries in the world.

- Answer: Rivers were attractive locations for the first civilizations due to several reasons. (General idea)
- 1- ^{So many} They provide steady supplies such as washing, cooking, drinking and hunting animals.
- 2- They were used as a means of transportation, so people started to carry on their extra food which facilitated commerce.
- 3- They made the land fertile for growing crops which helped in what is called the agricultural revolution which was the wide scale transition of human culture from being hunter-gatherers to being settled agriculturalists.

Long time ago, ancient people used to live in groups in caves or in jungles. Then later, they began to settle near rivers, because they were attractive locations for the first civilizations due to several reasons. → general idea

First of all, rivers provide steady supplies such as washing, cooking, drinking, and hunting animals. Secondly, they provide good farmland that helped in what is called the agricultural revolution, which was the wide-scale transition of human culture from being hunter-gatherers to being settled agriculturalists. Besides the fertile soil, rivers were also used as a form of highway and men began to use rafts and boats as a form of water transport to carry their extra food, therefore, they became farmers as well as traders.

To sum up, although the previous civilizations vanished, they were able to make history and make significant contributions to the modern world.

So, what is the importance of rivers for the first settlements?
